

January 24, 2020

Dear Parents,

I hope everyone had a nice weekend, even with the weather being the way it was. We are almost through January and the days are staying lighter longer, which is always a good sign that spring is coming.

We have regrouped our student math groups with the winter math assessments that we completed last week. We continue to work with them at their level and support them to gain skills. They have made a lot of growth since the fall assessments!

We continue to support their literacy skills through our reading groups, Foundations and Readers Workshop. We continue to add letters and snap words. We have slowed things down to be sure the students fully understand before moving on. It will help them next year when the pace is quicker in first grade if they are solid with skills being asked of them this year.

We also did a weather unit this week which we will finish up next week. We became weather watchers and so the children might be noticing the clouds in the sky, is it warm or cold, is the wind blowing and is it raining or snowing? It was fun to see them become excited about the weather.

I apologize that I forgot to send home the towels last week. Please look for them today in your child's backpack.

Upcoming Events

Jan. 24: Book Order Due

Feb 13: Jungle Book show (see flyer included) 5:30, PTA 6:30

Feb. 17-21: Winter Break

March 3: No school for students, Town Voting Day

Have a good weekend!